

A New Approach to Drawing States in State Space Models

Denis Pelletier

Department of Economics
North Carolina State University

Abstract:

We introduce a new method for drawing state variables in Gaussian state space models from their conditional distribution given parameters and observations. Unlike standard methods, our method does not involve Kalman filtering. We show that for some important cases, our method is computationally more efficient than standard methods in the literature. We consider two applications of our method.